School of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, presents “DECENT EXPOSURE”

A Juried Exhibition of Work by Continuing Education Students
June 14–28, 2007

OVERVIEW

The School of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston (SMFA), will present “Decent Exposure” from June 14–28, 2007. This juried exhibition features a selection of work by 52 artists who are enrolled in SMFA’s spring 2007 Continuing Education studio art courses. The studio art courses and workshops offered by the SMFA are designed for adults and teenagers of all levels. Spring Continuing Education offers day and evening courses and workshops for adults, certificate programs in graphic design and illustration, and Saturday workshops for high school students.

Continuing Education has long been an integral part of SMFA’s curriculum, but for the first time in more than 10 years a juried exhibition has been created to display work created solely by CE students. The concept of a Continuing Education exhibition arose primarily from the desire to provide students with an opportunity to show their work to a wider audience as well as offer the community insight into the Continuing Education program. “Decent Exposure” showcases the creativity and passion of these students and includes a wide range of media from drawing, metals, and photography, to animation, painting, and sculpture, and much more.
